

The sky is dult and grey,
Piercing and chill the blast,
Each step resounds on the frosty ground,
Winter is come at last.

-020-

Mamma sits by the fire

Her little ones round her knees.

"How cosy we are, Mamma," they cry,

"Tell us something, if you please."

"Tell us about King Winter,

And about Jack Prost, his man;
We'll not be noisy or naughty at all,
But as good as ever we can,"

"Well then;" says manma, "you, Jenny,
May knit and listen, my dear;
And Johnny may split up wood, to make
The fere burn bright and clear."

King Winter dwells in the North;

Far away in the Frozen Zone,

In a palace of snow he holds his court,

And sits on an icy throne.

He has cushions of course: his Queen Made them out of her wedding gown. Stuffing them well with mosofiakes fine, And soft as eiderdown.

-050-

The King has a trusty servant,

Jack Frost is his name; his nose

Is raspberry red, his beard is white,

And stiff as a crutch it grows.

-020-

Old Jack is a sturdy good fellow,
And serves their Majesties well;
He's here and he's there, and he's everywhere,
And does more than I can tell.

Then out come all the boys and girls,
Jack's handiwork to view,

And their noses and cheeks turn red with cold,
Some of them even turn blue.

They pelt each other with snow,

Roll it up in a mighty ball,

And shout and laugh and scamper about,

And heels over head they fall.

-424-

And for want of buds and blossoms

To stress in his Majesty's way,

With magic flowers of his own device.

He makes the windows gay.

These wonders wrought in a single night

May well excite surprise;

Amazed is the sun when he gets up at dawn,

And he stares with all his eyes.

-920-

Fine mirrors the King delights in:

None are finer than Jack can make:

And in matchless sheets of crystal clear

He lays them on river and lake.

The trees, all naked and drear,

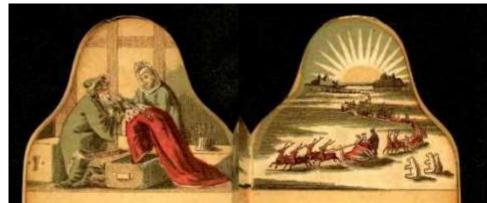

He robes in the purest white,

And with icicles shining with rainbow hues,

He makes their branches bright.

----

Jack Frost has a busy time then,

Buthe's helped and advised by the Queen,

That all may be right when the King

goes forth,

And everything fit to be seen.

----

That the King may have pleasant travel,
And no stone burt his royal toe,
Her Majerty spreads all over the earth,
A carpet of downy snow.

Each year, as the day comes round,
The king and his royal train
Set off on a tour through the wide world,
And sweep over mountain and plain.

His Majesty fails not to visit

Every clime that's not too hot,

To look in upon both high and low,

From the palacs down to the cot.

--0200-

They make a huge man of mow,

As grand as a Russian Cear,

Awooden moord in his hand, in his mouth,

A carrot to serve for cigar.

His eyes, his hair, and his beard,

They paint as black as my slove

With burnt stick but they spoil his nose,

For they stick it rather askew.

Then what do you think! For a cockshot
They take him; they pelt him and hit;
They knock of the encoman's ears
and nose,
But he does not mind it a bit.

Hurrah! for the good thick ice.

Oh! is a't it jolly! They slide,

They skate, and in sleight so fine they go,

And moift as the wind they glide.

-424---

King Winter laughs at the sport,

Cries "Bravo!" and claps his hands,

And calling in haste for his man,

Jack Frost,

He gives him these commands:

-434-

"Go see the paper and mammas,

And bring me word what they say:

Have the children been good and well behaved,

Since last I came this way!"

The King trims Christmas trees,

To give to good girls and boys,

With tapers and trinkets of silver and gold,

And all sorts of dainties and toys.

The Queen cuts twigs of birch,

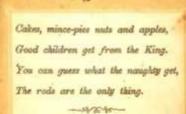

Of birch so supple and keen,

And daintily ties them up into rods

The finest that ever were even.

-2/2010-

"Oh dear mamma," cries Jenny,

"Johnny's been good, and so have I!

Pray tell Jack Frust we don't want the rod,

Oh! do ask him to put it by."

Mamma smiles on her darlings,

They run to her, kies her, and say:

"How long do you think will it be,

Mamma,

Ere King Winter goes away!"

"He will lay upon Baby's cradle

The snowdrops that early come forth;

And then, my dears, he will bid us good bye

And go back to his home in the North."
